1. Claims 1-11 are presented for examination.

2. Claims 8 and 10-11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. § 112, second paragraph, as being indefinite for failing to particularly point out and distinctly claim the subject matter which applicant regards as the invention.

The claims are indefinite because the following claim language is not clear:

a) "passing an article..." in claim 8 is not clear because the nature of the article cannot be ascertained clearly. It is not clear whether it is a magazine article or something else;

and

b) "computer for a server" in claim 10 and "computer program for making a computer for a server" in claim 11 is not clear and vague and indefinite.

3. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains.

Patentability shall not be negatived by the manner in which the invention was made.

Application/Control Number: 09/893,903

Art Unit: 2142

4. Claims 1-11 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Finkelstein et al.

5. Finkelstein et al (6,283,923) taught the invention substantially as claimed including a communication system for remotely monitoring and diagnosing a user and communicating information between the sites, e.g., the user at the monitoring site and a central facility site, the system comprising:

the first site including

- a) diagnosis means for performing a diagnosis of the user or patient of a terminal device on the network (col 7, line 37 et seq);
- b) memory means (174) for memorizing private information of the user and a diagnosis result of the diagnosis means together with an ID key (col 7, lines 37-65);
- c) first transmission means for transmitting the diagnosis result and the ID key to the user (col 7, line 30 et seq); and
- d) second transmission means for transmitting the private information (patient information) and the diagnostic result to a second site (col 3, line 7 et seq.)
- 6. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the networking art at the time of the invention that the claimed invention differed from the teachings of Finkelstein et al only by a degree, e.g., in the second site receiving the ID key and private information and transmitting them to the first site to get the diagnostic result. Finkelstein et al taught a web based system using an internet web browser (see col 7, line 25 et seq.) it is well known in the networking art that any number or users or computers from many sites around the globe may access the information through the web browser by entering the proper URL of the server to see the diagnosis result. Since Finkelstein et al taught using web based system, it would be obvious to share the results with as many sites as desired including the claimed second site, see col 10, line 29 et seq.)

The ID key would be the patient identification information (see col 7, line 62 et seq.)

Finkelstein et al taught that diagnostic results were sent via email to the patient or user (see col 7, line 5 et seq; col 7, lines 65-67; col 8, line 1 et seq, and col 9, line 7 et seq.)

As to the claimed server, Finkelstein et al taught running a web server (see col 10, line 19 et seq.) Other claimed elements are all obvious variations of the well known techniques of the web based networking systems.
